Illinois State University

President

Dear ISU Seniors:

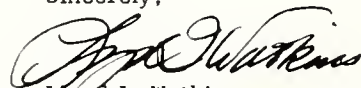

Earning a university diploma is a splendid achievement, and I congratulate each of you on reaching this important academic milestone. Illinois State University is proud of you.

As you complete this phase of your preparation for the future, take time to rejoice with your family and friends over your achievements; but also take time to look ahead at the opportunities which exist for you. I hope you will continue to pursue truth and knowledge, and that you always will have a sincere regard and concern for others.

I wish for each of you success in your personal and professional endeavors; may you make a positive difference in the lives of other people.

Best wishes for a splendid future.

Sincerely,

Lloyd I. Watkins
President

From its small beginning in 1857, ISNU quickly established itself as a leader in state education during the remainder of the 19th century. The presidents following Charles Hovey, who left for military service in 1861 as colonel of the Schoolmaster's Regiment and never returned, were strong leaders with single-minded dedication to the Normal University's mission of teacher education. Richard Edwards (1862-1876), Edwin C. Hewett (1876-1890) and John W. Cook (1890-1899) each in his own way sought to improve the quality of the institution through innovations in the curriculum and recruitment of a distinguished faculty. Under their leadership enrollment grew to nearly 900 students by 1900. Admission was usually by examination and courses were taken in a normal department in various subjects and pedagogy (usually taught by the president), while observation of master teachers and practice teaching took place in a model school attended by local children. Two or three years of study were required before a diploma was granted and graduates immediately qualified for teaching positions at all levels of education but most often in the common schools.

With a faculty that reached 19 by 1900, a number of whom held doctorates from German universities, ISNU became in the 1880s and 1890s a leading center in the nation for the Herbartian movement in teacher education with its emphasis on an integrated curriculum for the elementary grades. Summer institutes for teachers early became a regular and popular feature of the university's offerings.

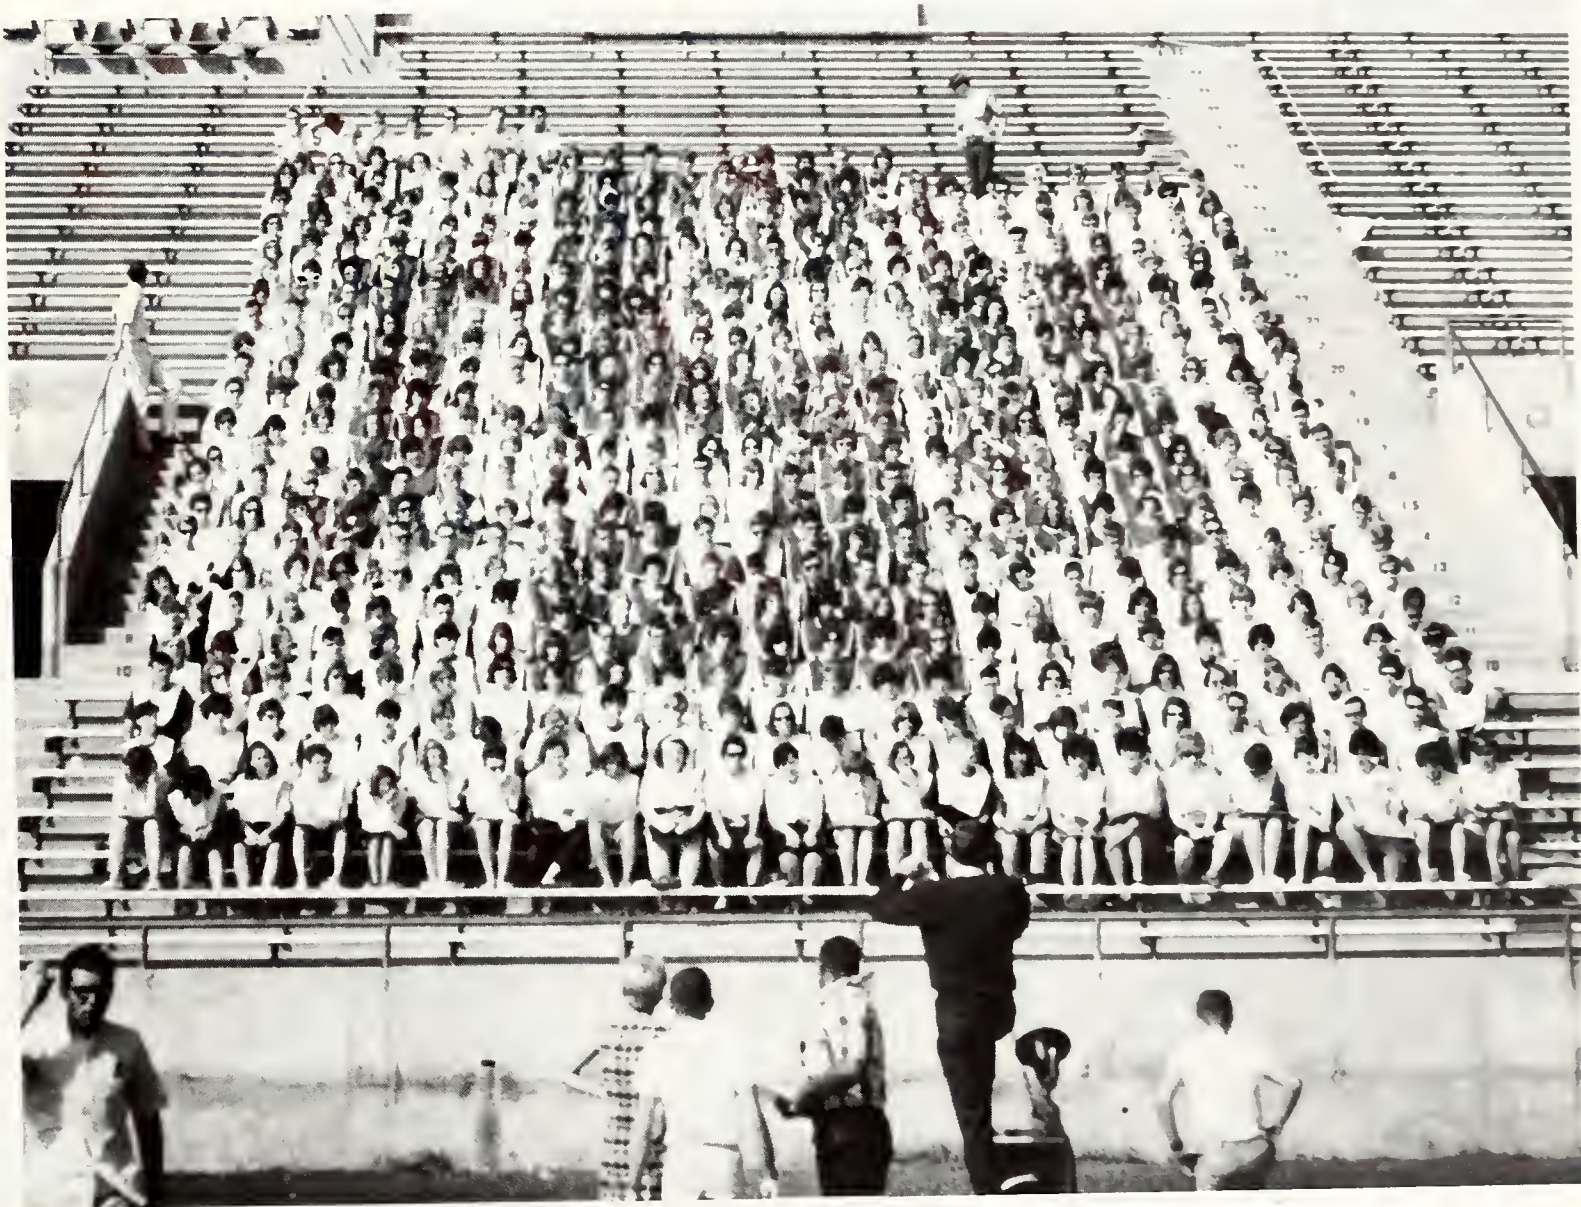

The text on this and the following 3 pages was edited from a publication commemorating the 125 years of ISU. It was written for the publication by Roger Champagne, professor of history, and Eugene Jabker, associate provost; edited for the year-book by Mike Torri, staff member.

Yet, ISNU's achievements during its first 50 years, distinguished though they were, proved to be a burden as the 20th century opened. The basic problem was the fact that ISNU was only a normal school, unable to bestow a baccalaureate degree on its graduates. The issue was crucial, for public elementary and high schools increasingly required their teachers to possess a four-year college degree. If ISNU was to remain true to its mission of teacher preparation and be abreast of educational developments, an expansion of institutional function was imperative. The problem and the solution were seen with clarity by David Felmley, whose strong presidential leadership (1900-1930) began the expansion of ISNU from a normal school into a teachers college. At his request, the Illinois General Assembly in 1907 authorized ISNU to grant a bachelor's degree in education and the first was conferred the next year. By 1912 students were required to select academic major and minor fields of study, and with that change the curriculum expanded as new courses were added to the catalog. Enrollment increased sharply to 1,500 by 1930, and the student life involved a wider range of activities: a student council was formed in 1920; intercollegiate athletics begun in the 1890s, became a regular part of the university life, with the first Homecoming celebration in 1921; Greek honorary societies were organized in the late 1920s to recognize student academic distinction. As the university changed, five new buildings were added to the campus before Felmley's retirement: a manual arts and auditorium (Edwards Hall), Thomas Metcalf Training School (Moulton Hall), a women's dormitory (Fell Hall), McCormick Gymnasium, and the Felmley Hall of Science.

ISNU celebrated its centennial anniversary in 1957, proud of its century-long achievements in teacher education. But even as the celebration got underway, ISNU was at the threshold of a new phase of institutional development. Like other schools in Illinois and the nation, ISNU in the years ahead experienced rapid growth and expansion in response to the public demand for greater access to higher education. Within a decade ISNU was transformed from a small teachers college into a large multipurpose university. The evidence of expansion was everywhere on campus. Enrollment exploded, from less than 4,000 in 1957 to over 17,500 in 1970. Faculty growth ran a parallel course, exceeding a thousand by the end of the Sixties. Building construction to accommodate the larger numbers never ceased, as 23 buildings, two major additions, married student apartments, and a field house-stadium complex were added to the campus between 1957 and 1970. The university's phenomenal physical growth prompted other changes of greater significance. During the presidency of Robert G. Bone (1956-1967), Doctoral programs were started (1963), the university name was changed to Illinois State University (January 1, 1964), the institutional mission became that of a liberal arts university and academic programs and departments were organized into colleges (1966).

But such rapid expansion was not without its problems. In common with every other public campus whose enrollment soared, student life underwent a dramatic change from cohesion to alienation to protest. While campus opposition of students to the Vietnam War made newspaper headlines during the Sixties, academic practices of administration and faculty were also subject to vocal student criticism. An important consequence of the changing nature of campus life was the inclusion of students, along with administration and faculty, in a revamped system of school governance embodied in a university constitution (1969) which achieved a coalescence of the diverse elements comprising the university community.

As Illinois State University entered the decade of the Seventies the frenetic pace of growth slowed. While some expansion continued during the Seventies — 2,000 more students, additional buildings such as Bone Student Center, Braden Auditorium and a new Milner Library, and new academic programs — the decade was marked by an assessment of what the university had achieved and how it could best serve the public in the future. But whatever that future might be, ISU had finally become the university which its founders had envisioned 125 years ago.

Alpha Delta Pi

Since their foundings, women's fraternities have represented the highest standards wherever they have been chartered in the areas of scholarship, etiquette, cooperation, leadership and almost every other imaginable facet of daily living. This has been maintained through selectivity in membership and prideful understanding of what a sorority is.

Alpha Delta Pi is a specially selected above-average group of young women bound together in ritual by common ideals. To be chosen as a pledge and later to be admitted to active membership in Alpha Delta Pi is an honor and a privilege.

Although he lost his bid to run in the Normal City Council general elections, ISU student, Richard Spoor, surprised much of the town by losing that bid by only 81 votes.

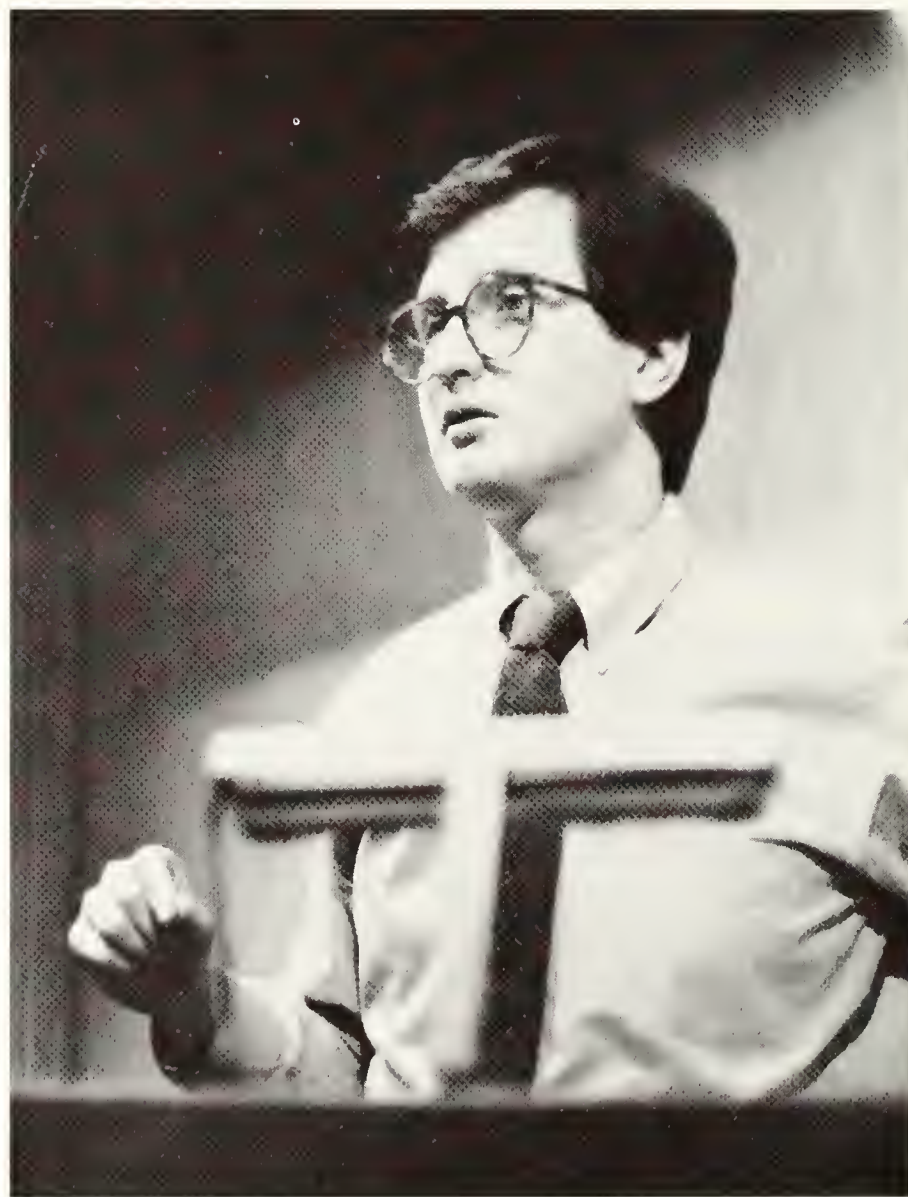

Spoor, a former Marine sergeant from Rantoul, now a senior political and social science major, and Brad Considine, a sophomore communications major, were both eliminated from the race for three Normal City Council seats to be decided in the general elections on April 12th.

Election results indicated that Spoor placed seventh with 811 votes, while Considine finished 12th with 389 votes out of a total field of 16 candidates, with the top 6 advancing to the general election.

Concerning his own campaign, Spoor said, "We gave it (the campaign) the best shot we could," and that he owes much to everyone who helped in his campaign. Spoor based much of his campaign on what he felt was a need for more student representation in town government. The results of the primary indicate to him that, "the town doesn't think it's necessary."

Health Sciences

Environmental Health The environmental health program is one of 18 accredited programs in the United States, and the only one in the State of Illinois. The purpose of the program is to provide students with specific types of educational experiences which prepare students for related, but separate, occupations within environmental health practice.

Health Education The health education program offers two options for majors: one option consists of preparation to work in local, state, and national health care institutions, agencies, and organizations which have health education as a part of their program. Graduates will be skilled in working with people from infancy through adulthood.

Medical Record Administration The medical record administration program is accredited by the Council on Medical Education of the American Medical Association in collaboration with the American Medical Record Association. Students majoring in this program will study liberal arts and sciences, medical terminology, disease nomenclature, and classifications systems. The graduates are employed in all health care facilities which deal with the management of health information.

Medical Technology The medical technology program is traditional with the students spending three years at the University and one year at an approved affiliated hospital School of Medical Technology. Students enrolled in this program take liberal arts and science courses with an emphasis in the biological and physical sciences, and professional medical technology courses. The one year residency consists of technical instruction in hematology, clinical chemistry, blood banking, pathogenic microbiology and other aspects of laboratory medicine. Graduates are employed in a variety of clinical laboratories and hospitals, research institutions, and drug manufacturing.

P h i l o s o p h y

Philosophical questions arise in connections with every form of human endeavor; hence here is room for philosophic activity in everyone's life. Accordingly, the Department of Philosophy offers courses which will aid students to become aware of this philosophic dimension in human existence and which will develop the skills of critical thinking and logical analysis essential to dealing with philosophical issues rationally. Some such courses study great philosophers systematically, while others treat sets of particular issues. Photo — Michael Gorr, Associate Professor of Philosophy.

Notes from parents:

Dear Rhonda,

You've always been, you'll always be a daughter worthy of much success and happiness, and very special love. Congratulations and best wishes. God Bless. Good Luck. Mother.

Hello World,

Here comes Marela Roxane McCormack, born in Peoria, IL, molded by the traditions of cloud chasers and Foss. OK, raised by the Rolling Axes, Richwoods and ISU. A young woman, plus equipped with the ambition, integrity, integrity, and sensitivity to make a positive addition to the family and world. Good Luck. Love from Mom.

Dear Julie,

We are very proud and happy for you on your graduation and congratulations on a job well done. May happiness and success follow you always. Love from Mom, Dad & Niki.

Dear Deber,

CONGRATULATIONS! Now you could do it. I'm so very proud of you. I wait to see you. SOLID GOLD. Feel chair. LOVE YA. Mom.

Dear Doreen,

Congratulations! We are very proud of you. You have topped through that doorway to the best of the best. Rest of your life. Go for it! Love Mom, Teri & Niki.

Dear Lauren,

Congratulations! We are very proud of you. Love Mom & Dad.

Dear Sharon,

Congratulations on four very happy and successful years at ISU!! We wish you the very best for the future. You have made us very proud. We know the years ahead will be very rewarding. Love Mom & Dad.

Dear Karyn,

We love you and we are very proud of you. May you and Jon have the happiest future possible. Love Mom & Dad.

Nothing splendid has ever been achieved except by those who dared believe that something inside them was superior to circumstances.
